PACKET LINE HAS TROUBLE.

Libel Filed Against the Steamer of the Company May Mean its Dissolution.

A series of accidents to the steamers of the Pittsburg and Morgantown packet line has caused the company so much loss that United States Marshal Stephen P. Stone closed the line Wednesday afternoon and took possession of the property which he will sell to pay off the indebtedness of the company.

The Valley Supply company, a subsidiary concern of the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke company, entered libels in admiralty against the steamers I. C. Woodward in $2,696.97; Columbia, $3,151.94; Admiral Dewey, $159.61, and the Rose Hite, $429. These amounts are claimed for supplies furnished the boats. The packets comprise the property of the Pittsburg and Morgantown packet company, which is capitalized at $120,000. Wharfboats at Water street, McKeesport, Charleroi, Monongahela City and Morgantown are also of considerable value.

The steamer Columbia was at the Pittsburg wharf Wednesday afternoon with steam up ready to leave. The stockholders intended to give the United States marshal a bond and continue the line, but they finally gave up the attempt.

The packets of the Morgantown line have met with a series of accidents during the past two years The Rose Hite is now at the bottom of the river above Lock No. 5 where she sank about a month ago. The steamer Columbia burned and had no fire insurance, but did have accident insurance. The steamer was rebuilt. The Edgar Cherry carried fire insurance but sank at the Lock No. 4 about two years ago and again the company lost. The company borrowed money to build the new Columbia. The line has been running with but one packet recently.

The sale of the steamers is scheduled to take place February 13. Much speculation was aroused as to who might purchase the line.

Viewers Held Meeting.

At the adjourned meeting of the road viewers, which was held Wednesday afternoon at the office of Borough Engineer J. F. Irwin, testimony was taken on the proposed new road. The Pittsburg Coal Co. oppose the proposed location, giving as their reason that it would be a hindrance in the operation of the mines. The report of the viewers has not been made public, but it is reported they will favor the opening of the road both at the Monessen end and the Pricedale end of the road, in their report which will be made to the February term of court.

Committee Refused offer.

The committee for the oratorical contest held here recently are in receipt of a request from the people of Scenery Hill for the young ladies who participated to recite in that town in the near future. The committee although regreting very much to do so have deemed is advisable to decline the offer. The people of Monessen should be very proud of this compliment bestowed on the young contestants' ability. The high opinion formed by several citizens of Scenery Hill who attended the contest is responsible for the offer.

The Halberd.

The distinctive weapon of the Swiss was the halberd, which was their principal weapon at Morgarten and Laupen. It is curious to note how the Teutonic nations, even to this day, prefer the cut and the Latin nations the point We have been told by German officers that when the German and French cavalry met in the war of 1870 the German sword blades always flashed vertically over their heads, while the French darted in and out horizontally in a succession of thrusts. Even the German dead lay in whole ranks with their swords at arm's length. So the English at Hastings worked havoc with their battleaxes. The Netherland mercenaries ... a hewing weapon at Bouvines the Flemings at Courtrai used their ... lendags fitted alike both for cut an thrust, and finally the Swiss mad... ay with their halberds, an improve... t on the godendag.

The halbe s had a point for thrusting, a hook wherewith to pull men from the saddle and above all a broad, heavy blade, "most terrific weapons" (valde terribilia), to use the words of John of Winterthur, "cleaving men asunder like a wedge and cutting them into small pieces." One can imagine how such a blade at the end of an eight foot shaft must have surprised galloping young gentlemen who thought themselves invulnerable in their armor. —Macmillan's Magazine.

Fishskin Lanterns.

The puffer or swell fish has the power to distend itself with air into the shape of a globe. Japanese living in the Hawaiian Islands make of the skin of the big puffer found in Hawaiian waters an odd and grotesque lantern. When the skin of the big puffer has been first removed while it is still soft it is stuffed out to its full size in globe shape and so left to dry. The skin is not much thicker than paper and translucent brown on the upper part and gray below. The fins are preserved and dried sticking out from the fish, the tail being perked up at an angle. A circular opening is made in the back, through which the light can be placed and in [illegible] a big puffer's skin may be a foot in diameter crosswise and fifteen inches in length, and what with the head of the fish appearing at one end and the perked up tail at the other and the fins projecting at the sides this fish skin lantern makes a very curious object.—New York Herald.

If the Heart Stops Beating.

When the heart stops the circulation ceases, the capillaries of the lungs become gorged with stagnant blood, while the blood in the brain no longer carries away the waste products and brings the oxygenated fluid to restore the tissues. As the blood takes about half a minute to circulate through the whole system, it may be taken that at the end of this period after the stoppage of the heart the arteries would be filled by the last effort of the left ventricle, while the veins would be pouring their contents into the right auricle. In a few seconds more the nervous centers would cease to act, and probably by the end of the minute the subject would be practically dead from suffocation, although reflex muscular action would probably keep up the appearance of life for some seconds longer.

Traps For Tigers and Panthers.

An ingenious trap for catching tigers and large black panthers is used by the natives of an isolated part of Indo-China. A short length of a tree log is hollowed out, and around each end of it are driven long sharp spikes so as to project inward, leaving an opening of about six inches. Through a small trapdoor a p... riah dog or a pig is placed in the log fo... bait and the trap left for future deve... pments. The tiger or panther cas... pushes in his paw to secure the b... out when he tries to withdraw it ... is impaled on the sharp spikes, and ... trapped.

Falling Fr... the Sun to the Earth.

The phil... ers have figured out some queer ... oblems since the time of Horatio, bu... e of them is more curious than th... relating to the amount of time it would take for an object to fall from the sun or moon to our earth. It has been decided, after an immense amount of figuring, that if a bowlder weighing a ton should fall from the sun it would take it ninety-nine years, nine months and two hours to reach the earth. The same bowlder could make the trip from the moon to the earth in four and one-half days.

Painting Winona

By ETHEL BARRINGTON

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Against the autumnal yellow and crimson glory of the maples the girl's golden hair and dull red dress made a harmonious picture. Wilfred Clay, artist, brought his wheel to a sudden stop, wondering if he ever had seen anything so exquisite before. Surely it was toward this that he had been journeying, this wonderful breathing picture. Already he mentally planned the blendings of madder and lakes, of chromes and yellow, to reproduce the charm as, steadying his wheel against a rock, he climbed the bank.

"Is there any place near by where I can put up for a few days?" he inquired, standing bareheaded before the vision.

"Folks sometimes stay at the farmhouses."

"Any you particularly recommend?"

"None," was the laconic answer. The young fellow laughed, noting the discontent that dimmed the girl's real beauty. "How about that one?" indicating a red chimney that showed among the trees.

"I live there. It's no wors han the rest."

"It has attractions that others lack," he declared gallantly t the compliment flew wide of its "Will you accompany me to pr my cause?"

Silently the girl acquiesced, keeping a little in advance; then, suddenly waiting for him to join her, she began to talk rapidly. Her eyes never wavered from the advancing figure of a an, a farmer from his dress, who ith a switch lashed moodily at the goldenrod and passed without a word, t color above the loose coll traying his consciousnes ence. She left the artist c and sent her mother stranger. Clay pro g those terms and was soon s like case, wonderin persuade the girl to his fingers already work.

Later Clay found her leaning against the trellis where the vines still clung.

"I congratulate you on being an heiress. Independence is not the least gift

The girl raised her head rebelliously "Why should Aunt Liza give me her money? I don't want it. I hardly ever saw her and cared less. What right had she to spoil my life?" Her voice vibrated with resentment, and a whistle escaped Clay.

"Truly an unusual view to t you are in trouble possibly you. I'd like to try."

"I don't hold with such," the girl indifferently and went in Musing Clay continued to pull at his brier. It took a good deal to discourage him. The subject was an inspiration. He would paint now as before he only dreamed of doing. On the morrow he would sketch the girl from memory—her pose and coloring were photographed on his brain—an go to work on the background.

But as the week passed he himself no nearer his object. who now conversed on ordin ies, was dumb when he advan picture, nor did he gain in her confidence regarding her personal affairs. It was from her mother, Mrs. Eager, that he learned the facts.

Previous to her aunt's death Winona had "kept company"—the local phrasing for courtship—with Keith Adams, but there had been no formal engagement, for which fact the mother now rejoiced, as with her improved prospects the girl might do much better. Mrs. Eager herself had privately administered some broad hints to the aspiring farmer, which he had apparently accepted. Did Winona care? Well, she supposed that Winona thought she did, but she was young enough to have a dozen fancies before coming into control of her money. It was her duty to marry well and help her brothers and sisters.

"I'm told you are not ambitious," remarked Clay that evening, causing Winona to flare up unexpectedly.

"I want nothing but to be let alone. If I had the money now I'd give it to you—to any one—who'd go away and never let me hear of it again." Her voice choked suddenly, and, covering her face, she sobbed with an abandon and passion that Clay never had seen before.

He felt uncomfortable, like all men when confronted with women's tears. But he wanted to help her. Above all things he wanted his picture. Impulsively he whispered a suggestion, a hint for their mutual benefit. At first she made no sign of having heard, but little by little she grew calm and as he finished caught eagerly at his hands.

"You are right, of course!" she cried. "Who ever won anything by moping?"

When she retired Clay sat lost in meditation. "It's playing with fire, but the picture's worth it," was his verdict.

From that night the girl's demeanor changed. During the long autumn days she posed for the painter beneath the maples and chatted gayly with him at dusk on the porch, but always where her red gown might be seen by one passing on the road. Her mother smiled knowingly at the neighborly gossip that reached her ear.

Meanwhile the picture grew, and Clay knew it was the best he ever had done, though the exquisite tints of the girlish face were his despair, and the sweet companionship caused the memory of a certain compact to dim.

Each day the young farmer passed and repassed, and the more depressed he seemed the more gayly Winona's laugh pursued him on his way.

One morning Clay was putting finishing touches on the foliage when a shadow darkened his canvas. Glancing up, expecting Winona, who was to join him, he encountered the angry gaze of Keith Adams. For a moment neither spoke; then all the pent up jealousy and rage broke forth in the lover.

"How dare you paint her, making her name and face alike common?"

"Who are you?" inquired Clay coolly.

"I speak as man to man," replied the other. "She's nothing but a child, for all her years. Leave her alone."

"I think I've helped her," remarked Clay.

"Do you love her?" demanded Keith Adams. "Are you going to marry her?"

"What business is it of yours?"

The half smile in the artist's eye maddened Keith, and he gripped him savagely by the collar, thrusting his face close.

's this much—that while I live no shall slight that girl. I know you g men. You think you own cre elieve yourselves free to take and pay no bills. That girl's being mixed with yours, and for you to go unless you mean her. Which is it to be?"

a dropped his hold, and, turning, wo men saw Winona close beside n, with all the witchery of love in her eyes. Clay spoke slowly, a grim acceptance of the inevitable hardening his face.

"It seems that my friendship has been questioned, Winona, so you must forgive me if I seem abrupt. Will you be my wife? I"—

"Hush!" cried the girl. "Don't spoil had. It was not necessary between you and me," she added, with a laugh. Then, turning to the man of her choice, his name fell tenderly from her lips.

Clay considerately turned his back and, collecting his painting outfit, left them in the golden glory of the maples. 's a good thing the picture is about Then his mouth closed inscru he went down the road alone.

on, without whose discov aws of chemical combina stry as an exact science exist, was wholly color knowledge of the fact came happening of the sort which hance. On his mother's birth n he was a man of twenty took her a pair of stockings had seen in a shop window "Silk, the newest fashion."

e has bought me a pair of grand John," said the mother, "but what made thee fancy such a bright color? Why, I can never show myself at meeting in them."

John was much disconcerted, but he told her that he considered the stockings to be of a very proper go to meeting color, as they were a dark bluish drab.

"Why, they're red as a cherry, John," was her astonished reply.

Neither he nor his brother Jonathan could see anything but drab in the stockings, and they rested in the belief that the good wife's eyes were out of order until she, having consulted various neighbors, returned with the verdict, "Varra fine stuff, but uncommon scarlety."

The consequence was that John Dalton became almost the first to direct the attention of the scientific world to the subject of color blindness.

Can You Define Them?

How many people, even Sons and Daughters of the Revolution, can define the following words? To how many does any of the words convey a picture? Yet they were all of good usage in colonial days: Allibanies, balcony, bishops, baths, horsehair bonnets, mushmellon bonnets, whalebone bonnets, wagon bonnets, beehive bonnets, flap breeches, "Franklin's" (broadcloth breeches, lined with leather), iron busks, whalebone busks, conch shell buttons (Washington had a set), byram, men's Newmarket caps, chapeau bras, caushets, chints, clocks, cushiloes, cuttanees, cue de Paris, chuckloes, dannador, dickmansoy, everlasting, florettes, greatcoat, gray duroy, gulix, roll up stockings, issinghams, huckabacks, Job's tears, kitisols, lemonees, moree, naffermany, saxling ham, side locks, skimmers, small cloths, spice, clim'd soosus, pack thread stays, stiffners, tandems, ticklenberg, tout ples, thrumbs, turketts, oiled linen, watchets, shagreen, etc.

Couldn't Lift Ten Pounds.

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Strength and Health to the Sufferer, Making Him Feel Twenty-Five Years Younger.

Sick kidneys cause a weak, lame or aching back, and a weak back makes a weak man. Can't be well and strong until the kidneys are cured. Treat them with Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's the testimony of one man cured.

J. B. CORTON.

J. B. Corton, farmer and lumberman, of Deppe, N. O., says "I suffered for years with my back. It was so bad that I could not walk any distance nor even ride in easy buggy. I do not believe I could have raised ten pounds of weight from the ground, the pain was so severe. This was my condition when I began using Dean's Kidney Pills. They quickly relieved me and now I am never troubled as I was. My back is strong and I can walk or ride a long distance and feel just as strong as I did twenty-five years ago. I think so much of Doan's Kidney Pills that I have given a supply of the remedy to some of my neighbors and they have also found good results. If you can sift anything from this rambling note that will be of any service to you, or to any one suffering from kidney trouble, you are at liberty to do so."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Corton will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.

By A. M. DAVIES OGDEN

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

The night was perfect. Over picturesque Havana a yellow moon poured a flood of glory, throwing strange shadows on the old Morro, where the O'Donnell tower light revolved with steady flashes, and steeping all the world in a subtle, elusive spell.

On the Malecon the band was playing. Light hearted laughter floated from the thickly clustered benches and carriages. It was not a night to be alone.

Jerry Benedict, standing on the edge of it all, felt the beauty and knew the loneliness. He had come to Havana at Tom's suggestion. "There is a good opening down here which might suit you," his brother had written. And now, on arriving, he found Tom gone to Cienfuegos, not to return for several days. Jerry, wandering about by himself, had promptly fallen in love with the quaint little city, its gayly painted houses, dusky white clad men and pretty senoritas. Havana was not a bad place, he decided. But tonight he was restless. The moon was almost too powerful in its splendor and charm.

Turning away from the merry crowd that made him feel an alien and an outcast, he decided to walk to his brother's house in Vedado. There was a fresh coolness in the air. A walk would do him good. He struck accordingly into one of the nearby streets.

On his side the pavement was quite dark, but across the way the moon, reflecting with dazzling brilliancy upon the pink and white houses, showed every detail of window and facade and revealed plainly any one within who leaned out to breathe the air.

Suddenly Benedict stopped short. In an upper window, alone, stood a girl, certainly the most exquisite girl Benedict ever had seen. Against the blackness of the room behind, her face, turned full toward the street, stood out as purely pale as a moon flower. Heavy masses of dark hair crowned the stately little head, and just back of the tiny ear lay one splendid crimson blossom. Benedict caught his breath. The girl could not see him there in the darkness, he thought, and he remained motionless, staring with eager eyes. Who could she be?

The sound of a footfall roused him, and he turned abruptly just at the moment to collide with a slender, carefully dressed man. Benedict, his eyes still full of moonlight, mumbled some word of apology, but the other, after a quick glance at the window, looked back at [illegible] smile.

"But you are quite excusable, senor," he said in pretty English. Again his eyes sought the window. "It is for me to apologize," he laughed. "The sight of the Senorita Carmela is reason enough."

"You know her then?" burst out Benedict. Then he started and recollected. "I—I beg your pardon," he stammered distressfully. "But—but"—

The man nodded more gravely. "I judge you are a stranger here," he remarked. Young Benedict flushed.

"Yes," he said. "I—I suppose it is awfully rude to stand in the street and stare that way. But I never had seen any one so beautiful before," he ended up quite simply, the color deepening under his tan. "And I thought perhaps—my brother might know," floundering again. "Mr. Thomas Benedict," he added as the other seemed to wait.

The Cuban looked at him more closely.

"Is Tom Benedict your brother?" he asked, and in some way his voice had altered. "Tom! Ah!" Then he lifted his hat.

"Good night," he said politely. "And let me give you a piece of advice. It is not unusual to stand under a window, to watch from a point of vantage, or even to speak." And again he laughed. "But you, senor"—and his tone held a warning tone—"for you, senor, it would be best not to try it. You are but a stranger here, and our customs are not yours."

And before the somewhat indignant Benedict could recover speech the stranger had bowed, replaced his cigarette between his lips and was gone. The girl at the window, too, had vanished, and Benedict, accepting perforce the other's advice, walked on. But the sight here and there in the dusky street of a man leaning against the iron bars which guard the lower windows, exchanging low remarks to some inmate, evoked strange longings.

In the morning, however, Jerry could laugh at the whole episode. A girl's face at a window—surely he had seen plenty such. And if not quite so wonderful as this one—well, the Cuban's remarks had been well meant and were worth remembering. So he idled away an hour or two in the Calle Obispo, with its gay shop windows and bright awnings stretched the width of the narrow little street. Then he went to the bank for letters and had luncheon at the Englaterra, where he looked in vain for a familiar face. He did not mean to go near that street, her street, again, he assured himself. And yet somehow as 5 o'clock drew near he found his feet taking him in that direction. He scolded himself, turned and began to walk away. But it seemed foolish to avoid a street just because a pretty girl lived there, and it was the shortest way home. He was sure that it was the shortest way home. The next moment he was pacing rapidly along it.

As he drew near the house where he had seen her, however, his step began to slacken. Would she—could she be there? He looked, hardly daring to hope. All at once his heart thumped madly. She was there, and she was looking straight at him. He could have sworn that she recognized him. Yet how was that possible? And then slightly, almost imperceptibly, but to Benedict quite unmistakably, she bent her head.

Tom was still away. There was nothing to do. Jerry fell into the way of passing through that street once or twice a day. The girl was usually in her window. He would bow gravely. She would respond with the faintest smile. And one never to be forgotten afternoon there fell at his feet a small scarlet flower.

The night Tom came home he watched his brother throughout dinner with puzzled, thoughtful eyes. He did not know much about the "kid," he reflected, nor how he took things.

"I saw Don Enrique Galdos today," he began abruptly. Then, as Jerry seemed unenlightened, he added. "He said that he had met you one night outside the Martinez." Jerry nodded.

"Oh, that chap! Yes; he did give me some talk about moving on, I believe."

"Which you apparently did not heed," commented Tom dryly. "And now it seems you have been compromising the girl and"—

"Compromising!" broke in Jerry wildly astonished. "Why, I've never even met her. Wouldn't I like to, though!"

"If you really wish it I suspect I can arrange it," said Tom slowly. "Donna Carmela is undeniably lovely. But do you realize what meeting her means?"

"Why, that I met her, I suppose," retorted Jerry. But Tom shook his head.

"It means more than that," he said quietly. "The Martinez are old fashioned people. Their ideas are very strict. You may court through the window if you like, but once taken to the house an engagement is settled."

"Engagement!" gasped Jerry. "Engagement to a girl you never have even spoken to!"

"That is the custom," said Tom. "And it is that or leave Havana. In fact, if Don Enrique had not known that you were my brother you might have got yourself into serious trouble. Luckily we are great friends, but even as it is—don't choose hastily, dear boy," he added kindly. "Of course it may have been the merest flirtation on your part, and you couldn't be expected to understand."

"And the girl?" cried Jerry. "She thinks"—

"She naturally knows nothing of American ways," answered Tom gravely.

For a moment Jerry sat with whirling brain. Become engaged to a perfect stranger? That he was longing to meet her he knew; that he would probably be only too glad of the chance to marry her he thought most likely. Yet he thought of the rose which had fallen at his feet and straightened himself.

"I should like to meet the Senorita Carmela," he said. "How soon may we go?"
